The "Barefoot Bandit" has been busted.

Colton Harris-Moore, a 19-year-old outlaw who has been on the run for nearly two years, has been arrested in the Bahamas, according to police.

The teen was reportedly captured in the early hours on northern Eleuthera island, a police official told The Associated Press.

Island police have been hunting the elusive "Bandit" for nearly a week after he crashed a stolen plane.

A press conference is planned for later today.

Authorities picked up his trail in Eleuthera after recovering a 44-foot power boat stolen from a marina on Abaco, 40 miles to the north, where he was suspected in a string of burglaries.

The search for the Houdini-like Harris-Moore, who is wanted in several states, moved to the Bahamas on Tuesday after a single-engine Cessna stolen on July 4 from an airport in Indiana was found crashed in shallow waters off Abaco island.

"He's gone from being a regional nuisance to a national nuisance to... an international criminal," Seattle FBI agent Steven Dean said last week.

Harris-Moore, who grew up in an abusive home, started living in the woods at age 7 and was busted for theft at 12.

The 6-foot, 5-inch teen fled a halfway house in 2008 and allegedly embarked on an increasingly audacious crime spree, stealing cars, speedboats and planes in Washington, Idaho, Oregon, Nebraska, Iowa and Illinois.

Harris-Moore became known as the "Barefoot Bandit" last fall after cops found footprints in an Idaho airport hangar where a plane - which later crash-landed out of gas 260 miles away - was stolen.

The brazen young outlaw also is known to leave clever notes at the scenes of his crimes.

In June, Harris-Moore left $100 and a hand-written note at a veterinary clinic in Raymond, Washington. It read: "Drove by, had some extra cash. Please use this cash for the care of animals -- Colton Harris-Moore, (AKA: "The Barefoot Bandit") Camano Island, WA." (See note here.)

Since he began his two-year run, Harris-Moore has gained "folk hero" fame like a modern-day Billy the Kid. Thousands "like" his fan page on Facebook, and YouTube is littered with videos both for and about him.
